SCENE START

INT. TRENDY COFFEE SHOP - DAY

A quiet, sunlit corner booth. MARCUS (40s, sharp suit, impeccably groomed, a smile that doesn't quite reach his eyes, but radiates an almost paternal warmth) sits opposite CHLOE (16, nervous energy, clutching a worn sketchbook, dressed modestly but with an undeniable, raw beauty). Coffee cups sit untouched.

<center>MARCUS</center>
> ...and that's the thing, Chloe. You have it. That indefinable it factor. Most girls, they try too hard. They pose. You? You just are. And that, my dear, is gold in this industry. Pure gold.

Chloe blushes, fiddling with a loose thread on her sleeve. She glances around, a mix of awe and disbelief in her eyes.

<center>CHLOE</center>
> I... I don't know what to say. It sounds incredible. My mom always said I should just focus on school, that modeling was a pipe dream.

Marcus leans forward, his voice dropping to a confidential, almost conspiratorial tone.

<center>MARCUS</center>
> And your mom, bless her heart, she probably has your best interests at heart. But she doesn't understand this world. She can't see what I see. A global campaign, Chloe. That's what we're talking about. Not some local catalog shoot. This is Vogue, this is Paris, this is... a completely new life.

He pauses, letting the words hang in the air, allowing Chloe to imagine it.

<center>MARCUS (CONT'D)</center>
> Now, there are a few formalities. Standard agency procedure, nothing to worry about. For the international travel, we'll need your passport. Just for safekeeping, of course. We handle all the visas, the flights, everything. It means you don't have to stress about losing it or anything like that. We're your professional handlers, darling. We take care of you.

Chloe's brow furrows slightly.

<center>CHLOE</center>

> My passport? My mom keeps it locked up. She'd... she'd want to know why.

Marcus smiles, a comforting, understanding smile. He reaches across the table and briefly, gently, touches her hand.

<center>MARCUS</center>

> And that's exactly why we need to handle this with a little... discretion. Think of it like a surprise. A wonderful, life-changing surprise you're preparing for them. The big reveal, you know?

He leans back, his expression serious but kind.

<center>MARCUS (CONT'D)</center>

> Look, Chloe, this is a highly competitive, incredibly fast-moving industry. Opportunities like this, they don't wait. We have a window, maybe a few weeks, for this initial boot camp, these test shoots. The agency wants to immerse you completely. To really sculpt you, hone that raw talent. And to do that... we need absolute focus. No distractions.

He makes eye contact, his gaze steady and reassuring.

<center>MARCUS (CONT'D)</center>

> Parents, as wonderful as they are, can sometimes be a distraction. They worry. They call. They mean well, but their anxieties can seep into your focus. This isn't just a trip; it's the start of your career. Think of top athletes before a major competition. They go into a bubble. They cut off everything, every potential distraction, so they can be entirely present, entirely dedicated. This is no different.

Chloe chews on her lip, torn.

<center>CHLOE</center>

> So... no calls? For a few weeks? My mom will freak out. She'll send the police.

Marcus chuckles softly, a sound designed to calm.

<center>MARCUS</center>

> No, no, darling, of course not. We're not talking about disappearing off the face of the earth. We're talking about a temporary, strategic detachment. When you're ready, when you've done the work and we have those incredible test shots, then we bring them in. We show them the undeniable proof of what you've achieved. We explain the rigorous process. They'll be so incredibly proud, they won't even remember the few weeks of quiet.

He pauses, letting that sink in, then continues, his voice gentle, almost paternal.

<center>MARCUS (CONT'D)</center>

> We don't want them worrying unnecessarily about the bumps in the road, the long hours, the inevitable

AuditAI Enterprise

Automated AI Compliance & Risk Assessment

rejections you'll face before you land that big job. They just need to see the finished product. The star. You. It's a kindness, really. Protecting them from the stress, protecting you from their well-meaning anxieties. We need you strong, clear-headed, and completely committed.

He leans forward again, lowering his voice conspiratorially.

> And frankly, Chloe, sometimes parents just don't understand the level of commitment required. They don't understand that to make it, you have to eat, sleep, and breathe this. You have to be all in. If you're constantly worried about a phone call, about explaining yourself, about their doubts... that energy is taken away from your potential. We need you giving 110% to you. Just for a few weeks. It's a small sacrifice for an entire future. And I'll be there, every step of the way. You won't be alone.

He gives her another reassuring smile, waiting, watching. The silence stretches, heavy with possibility. Chloe looks down at her hands, then back at Marcus, a nascent spark of conviction in her eyes.

<center>CHLOE</center>
> A few weeks... and then I can tell them? And they'll be proud?

<center>MARCUS</center>
> They will be beyond proud, Chloe. They'll know you've become who you were always meant to be. This is your chance. Are you ready to take it?

Chloe takes a deep breath, her gaze hardening with a newfound resolve.

<center>CHLOE</center>
> Yes. I'm ready.

<center>MARCUS</center>
> Good. That's my girl. So, the passport. How soon can you get it to me?

Fluorescent lights hum. The air smells of stale coffee and sugar. Leo, mid-40s, sharp suit, a practiced charm etched into his lines, leans across a sticky table towards CHLOE (16, nervous energy, pretty but unpolished). He sips from a nearly empty cup, his eyes never leaving her. She fidgets with the strap of her worn backpack.

<center>LEO</center>

> Look at you, Chloe. That jawline, the way the light just? catches your eyes. You've got it, kid. Seriously. Most girls your age, they're still trying to find their light. You just? radiate.

Chloe blushes, a small, hopeful smile playing on her lips.

<center>CHLOE</center>

> Really? My mom always says I'm too... gangly.

<center>LEO</center>

> Your mom sees her daughter. I see raw talent. Untapped potential. And trust me, I've seen enough to know the difference. The agency, they saw it too. That test shoot last week? Blew them away.

<center>CHLOE</center>

> They really liked it?

<center>LEO</center>

> Liked it? Chloe, they're already talking about you for the Milan showcase. Yes, Milan. Think about that. Just a few weeks of intensive training, portfolio building, and you could be on a flight. This isn't just local runway stuff, this is the big league.

His voice drops, becoming more intimate, conspiratorial.

<center>LEO</center>

> Now, there are a couple of things we need to sort out, logistics, really. Just standard industry practice. Nothing to worry about, just part of streamlining your path to success.

He takes a slow, deliberate sip, letting the anticipation build.

<center>LEO (CONT'D)</center>

> First, your passport. For international work, obviously, it's non-negotiable. But even for domestic contracts, identity verification is paramount. Agencies, especially the top-tier ones, they prefer to hold onto it. It's for safekeeping, really. Ensures everything's in order, no last-minute hiccups with visas or travel bookings. Keeps all your professional documents centralized and secure. Think of it as opening an account with us. We handle the paperwork, you focus on being brilliant.

Chloe's brow furrows slightly.

<center>CHLOE</center>

> My passport? My mom keeps it locked up. She says it's for emergencies.

<center>LEO</center>

AuditAI Enterprise

Automated AI Compliance & Risk Assessment

> And this is an emergency, Chloe. An emergency of opportunity. You can't afford to miss this window. Look, you get it to me, I'll get it to our legal team, they'll scan it, verify it, keep it locked in their safe - much more secure than a drawer at home, believe me. You'll have peace of mind knowing it's handled professionally. When we need it for travel, it's already there, no scramble. It's just... the way things are done at this level.

He gives her a reassuring, almost paternal smile.

<center>LEO (CONT'D)</center>

> Now, the second thing, and this is crucial for your focus, especially in the initial weeks... This industry, Chloe, it demands absolute dedication. Total immersion. When you're in training, when you're doing your first shoots, it's like a professional athlete in pre-season. Every ounce of your energy needs to be directed towards perfecting your craft.

He leans in further, his voice a low, comforting rumble.

<center>LEO (CONT'D)</center>

> Parents, bless their hearts, they mean well. But they can be... a distraction. They worry. They ask a million questions. 'Are you eating enough? Are you sleeping? What time will you be home?' It's natural, but it pulls you out of that zone. That headspace you need to be in.

<center>CHLOE</center>

> But... I call my mom every day.

<center>LEO</center>

> And that's sweet. But for the next few weeks, let's say... the first month? We need to go dark. Just for a short, intensive period. Think of it as a boot camp. A professional retreat. No calls, no texts, no social media check-ins with family. Just you, the work, and the team guiding you. It's about showing the agency, and yourself, that you're committed. That you're serious.

He pauses, watching her reaction, seeing the conflict in her eyes.

<center>LEO (CONT'D)</center>

> I know it sounds tough. But it's for your benefit, Chloe. Completely. When you emerge from those few weeks, confident, with a killer portfolio and a concrete plan, then you can reconnect. You'll have something tangible to show them, something to be incredibly proud of. They'll understand then. They'll see you've sacrificed, you've worked hard, and it's paid off. This is your chance to really prove what you're capable of, without any outside pressure or well-meaning interference. It's about setting boundaries for your career, for your future. You're becoming a professional, Chloe. And professionals sometimes have to make tough choices for their art. This is your first one.

He reaches across the table, covering her hand with his, a warm, firm grip.

<center>LEO (CONT'D)</center>

> You trust me, don't you? I'm here to make you a star. All I'm asking is for a few weeks of absolute focus, absolute dedication. Your future, Chloe, it starts now. What do you say? Are you ready to dive in, no distractions?

Chloe looks down at their intertwined hands, then back at his earnest, unwavering gaze. The lure of Milan, the validation, the promise of a future beyond her small town, all swirl in her head, drowning out the tiny voice of doubt.

<center>CHLOE</center>

> ...Okay. I'll... I'll get my passport. And I'll... I'll tell my mom I'm going camping, or something. Just for a few weeks.

Leo's grip tightens, a triumphant glint in his eyes that quickly vanishes behind his practiced, comforting smile.

<center>LEO</center>

> That's my girl. Smart. Dedicated. I knew you had it in you. This is going to be amazing, Chloe. Truly amazing.

He releases her hand, pulling out a sleek black card with his number.

<center>LEO (CONT'D)</center>

> Text me when you have it. And remember: no distractions. This is just for us, for your career. Got it?

Chloe nods slowly, a mixture of fear and exhilarating hope in her eyes.
